The Philadelphia Orchestra
The Grammy-winning Philadelphia Orchestra returns with the 2022–23 Season: TRANSFORMATION. Influenced by time, humanity, and progress, the season – Music Director Yannick Nézet-Séguin’s 11th – reflects a reborn institution and a collaborative artistic vision. The season opens with Lang Lang (September 28) performing Saint-Saëns’s Piano Concerto No. 2 and contemporary ballet company BalletX making its Philadelphia Orchestra debut in choreographer Tiler Peck’s setting of Valerie Coleman’s Umoja, Anthem for Unity (which the Orchestra commissioned and premiered in 2019). The lineup places women artists at the forefront, with Hilary Purrington’s Words for Departure, commissioned by the Orchestra (October 20 – 23, 2022); Nina Young’s Traces for violin and orchestra with violinist Jennifer Koh, a world premiere Orchestra co-commission (November 17 – 19, 2022); and Xi Wang’s Ensō, another world premiere Orchestra commission (December 8 – 10, 2022), among others.

The exploration of Florence Price’s work continues, with Nézet-Séguin leading her Violin Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 with Randall Goosby (October 6 – 9, 2022); while Rachmaninoff’s 150th birthday will be marked by a special celebration highlighting his relationship with The Philadelphia Orchestra, with Yuja Wang onsite for two weeks of performances featuring the composer’s four piano concertos and the Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini (January 26 – 27 and February 4 – 5, 2023). World-renowned pianist Emanuel Ax, violinist Leonidas Kavakos, and cellist Yo-Yo Ma unite to perform an evening of Beethoven trios in Beethoven for Three (March 18, 2023). Other highlights include the return of the film series, Family Concerts – including Who Is Florence Price? – as well as the continuation of Our City, Your Orchestra – collaborations within the diverse communities of Philadelphia – plus the HEARTTogether podcast, conversations on social justice, creative equity, and the musical world.
